The Food Pantry Shelf

Any Meeting

Court of Honor

A few scouts spent a Saturday morning stocking shelves at a food pantry, work that nobody saw and that didn't come with applause. But somewhere this week, a family is going to walk into that pantry and find what they need, organized and accessible, because of work this troop did. That's what service actually looks like most of the time — quiet, unglamorous, and genuinely useful to someone you'll never meet.
